Mentoring Project

I enjoyed doing my mentoring project and I am going back to help with the little boy. The boy was deaf and had a stroke, so his right side was wilted, I was told that the doctors said he would never write but he could, he wrote what was wrote on the paper. He also wrote what people signed to him. He had to do exercises for his right side and two ways he did that was to ride his bicycle and played basketball.

He tries everything and is not afraid of anything. He never lets his disability get him down; he is very independent. It didn’t take him long to warm up to me and at the end he did not want me out of his sight. It bothered him when I had to leave. It amazes me how he keeps up with his regular schoolwork despite his disabilities.

Working with Gary inspired me beyond words. This experience showed me the true meaning of life. That people, especially adults, take things for granted when we all don’t know how lucky we are.
